HEADS NEEDED

THE Commonwealth union over the past few years has suffered many setbacks. In the main they have been weathered over the conference table by good sense and judgment.

This week the Commonwealth Premiers meet to discuss a range of problems which would appear to be a United Nations agenda.

The prospects of a British-American-Russian pact to end the nuclear tests and attempts to promote East-West talks to stop the arms race will occupy a certain amount of the Premiers' club. Some of Dr Verwoord's fellow members, among them the African and Asian rulers who outnumber the whites by 550 million to 90 million want Dr Verwoerd to modify the rock-like rules of the South African apartheid

Inevitably it seems that the spotlight will be focused on the South African controversy with its overtones of a black-white conflict and its symbolism of a continent which is already erupting. If Dr Verweord ignores the demands of the antiapartheid members as It appears at this moment, they will withhold their consent for South Africa's continued membership.

London, Mar. 7. Morning profit-taking after yesterday's upsurge quietened the market today and clipped small fractions from many leaders but equities tended to edge upwards again by the final bell.

Steel and engineering stocks made up some lost ground in late deals. Textiles also improved, breweries were irregular and motors turned dul'. Recently buoyant stores turned down but Woolworths only shaded to 58/9. Electricals moved higher and shipping shares firmed.

Among the blue chips losing Imperial Dunlop, British Chemical, Motor Corporation, Rolls Royce and British American Tobacco. British Unilever climbed to 153/9. Dutch Unilever jumped 5/7½ to 203/1½. Olls were slightly easier on balance after narrow movements. Rubbers and teas were "Five firms were asked to carry out studies into marine nucleur propulsion, were given research contracts for this purpose, and tenders were invited for two types of reactor, a boiling water reactor and an reactor," he added.

"The Committee was set up jects. I have no doubt that the Minister will in due course make a pronouncement on the subject. I cannot officially comment on what course he is likely to recommend. But these newspaper reports and pure guesawork."

A spokesman for Authority said he had been instructed to make no comment about the matter at the moment If a statement were made, it would come from the Ministry.

Two marino experts called on Tuesday night for an intensification of British efforts to develop a nuclear-propelled ship.

In a study of the subject presented in London to the Institute of Marine Engineers they urged that research into and development of relatively, low-powered marine reactors should be intensified with the object of getting a safe nuclear thip to sea,

The study was made by Mc John M. Murray and Mr H. Nelson Pemberton, the Chlet Ship Surveyor, and the Chief Engineer Surveyor to Lloyd's Register of Shipping.

They held that powered passenger ships were foreign exchange reserve not only feasible but would probably prove at least comparable with conventional liners in speed, accommodation and machinery space. "In fact, the displacement of the nuclearpowered ship will be less than that for the equivalent conventional ship, resulting in higher speed or lower power requirements."

They concluded that, while much work is yet to be done in evaluating the structures interritol to protect any nucleardriven ship involved in collision, "with competent design the risk of loss will be less in a nuclear thip than in a conventional ship,"

Special protection would be needed about the reactor compartment to protect the ship against the effect of collision. Lloyd's Register provisional rules for nuclear ships isid down a "blankel" requirement giping protection sesinst external imports.

As protection for the reactor compartment if a nuclear ship should go aground, Lloyd's Register required on additional safeguard of a double bottom not less than six feet in depth adjacent to the compartments -China Mail Special.

In the green-walled livingdining room, cream upholstered sofas bordered a maroon Peking carpet.

Amiable and unassuming, Director Evan Yang settled back to tell the story of his transformation from a journalist to a movie-maker. He was a reporter on the Ta Kung Pao (Hongkong, 1941), war correspondent and editor for the Sao Tang Pao (Chunking, 1942-1944), editor of the Peace Daily News (Shanghai, 1945-48), and an organiser and fentures editor of the Hongkong Times (Hongkong, 1949-52). However, while on the staff of the Peace Daily News in Shanghai, he started to freelance, writing scenarios for the Central Motion Picture Company. He managed to write three films in three years.

During the four years with the Hongkong Times, he wrote four more scripts for various studios in Hongkong. This included the "Socialite," which he directed for the Freedom Film Co.

This film attracted the attention of Asia Pictures Ltd. which persuaded him to quit journalism altogether in 1953 and engaged him as a full-time writerdirector. In a little over a year, he did six scripts and directed two films for them. In 1954-55, Mr Yang wrote
